The Value of Knowing Our Personal Core Values

What is a 'Core Value'?

Basically, core values provide us with an internal reference on how our authentic self wants to feel. 'Core Values' can also be referred to as 'Core Desired Feelings'.

Okay, so let me try to explain that sentence a wee bit: our authentic self is that "center" that Lao Tsu refers to in his quote: "At the center of your being you have the answer, you know who you are and you know what you want" When we strip away everything we believe we have to do or should do; when we stop participating in activities that do not bring us joy or light us up in every way possible; when we challenge our assumptions of who we should be; and when we throw away everything that does not feel good or feel right, then what we are left with is our authentic self, the "who you are" in Lao Tsu's quote.

Our core values are indicators that point to, or show us, who our authentic self is.

Core values are indicators of what lights you up and what makes you feel alive, fulfilled, exhilarated, on top of the world. In this sense, a specific set of core values is fairly unique to each individual although shared core values can often be found at the center of strong partnerships and relationships of all kinds. And often, the larger the number of core values that are shared, the stronger the relationship or partnership that forms.

You know you have built your life around honoring your core values when your life is easy, full of joy, and when you know that there is very little, if anything, that you would change that could possible make your life any better than it is right now.

You can also tell fairly easily when your core values are not being honored in your life from the negative feelings that will often show up. Even individuals who have amazing lives can still feel restless and unfulfilled if any of their core values are being ignored.

Core values can be used to help you make all kinds of decisions relating to how you want to shape or design your life.

Lifestyle decisions that are impacted by personal core values can involve and affect pretty much all aspects of a your life, including, but not limited to:

- the hobbies you enjoy;
- the recreational activities you participate in;
- the job/career you work at;
- the city, country or community you live in;
- the relationships/friends/partners you interact with;
- where you go for your holidays;
- whether you thrive as an employee or as a self-employed entrepreneur;
- what company you work for;
- who your clients are

Basically every aspect of your life is influenced to a greater or lesser extent, either positively or negatively by your personal core values. Even individuals who seem to have it all, a beautiful life, an amazing career, a perfect partner, can still feel restless, easily distracted and slightly dissatisfied with their life if even one of their core values is not being honored in their life.

How Do I Find Out What My Personal Core Values Are?

Using the Personal Core Values list below as a starting point, take some quiet time when you can be undisturbed by other people, pets, phones, delivery people, etc., and then:

- 1. Relax and slowly read each of the values listed below. Identify all of the values in the list that you feel some form of positive reaction towards, the values that resonate with you, that make you feel happy, or excited. Ignore or eliminate all the values that you feel a negative reaction to, or have no reaction at all to. You will very likely end up with a list of values that is still fairly long.
- 3. Group your core values into between 5 10 individual groups. Look for patterns in the words that you have chosen, for example, the words freedom, self-reliance, independence, are all slightly different but if they all resonate with you they could all be grouped under one word. Choose one of the values included in the group to be the group's name. If you do not identify similar words, individual Groups can contain single core values. These are your Core Values

Bringing your core values into your life is as easy as:

- 1. select one of your core values, for example 'Freedom'
- 2. list 5 activities or experiences that will make you feel your core value, for example the feeling of freedom could come from spending one hour a week doing something just for you (taking a walk, reading a book, visiting an art gallery, sketching a flower...)
- 3. do 3 things this week that generate this feeling.
- 4. repeat this exercise for each of your core values.

A Few Ways to Use Core Values to Help You Create Your Awesome Life:

- 1. if you are looking for a new career or a profession to develop a business around, look for jobs or professions that also contain your personal core values for example, if you are interested in becoming a nurse core values like empathy, self-confidence, commitment, would enhance your experience as a nurse.
- if you are thinking about becoming self-employed then you might want to explore what core values like freedom/independence, commitment, self-reliance, resilience mean to you and determine whether they are part of your Personal Core Values.
- 3. if you are looking for a new community, or city, or county to move to, exploring how well the new culture or personality of the area you are thinking of moving to matches your personal core values.
- 4. hobbies and recreational activities that share your core values will be far more engaging and enjoyable that ones that do not. Is "competitive" one of your core values? Or is "Adventure"? Or is 'Dexterity"?
